

Washingtonian Publisher Shifts To New Republic

Robert J. Myers is resigning as publisher of the Washingtonian magazine to take a similar post with the New Republic, it was announced yesterday.

Myers, who with Laughlin Phillips founded the Washingtonian three years ago, will remain as vice president of Washington Magazine, Inc., and will continue to be a stockholder and a member of its board of directors.

Myers will replace Garth Hite at the New Republic. Hite leaves to become publisher of the Atlantic magazine Oct. 1.
